

THE WAR ON THE ITALIAN FRONT

By Maj.-Gen. Emilio Gughel.
motti, Military Attache to Italian Embassy

On the Italian front, the great Austrian offensive was brought to naught, the offensive troops, as we saw from documents taken from prisoners, had been conducted on the part of Austria, with the certainty of being able to crush Italy; a comparative calm has followed. Calm, of course, in comparison to the recent great military operations on our front and on the French front. Calm, but not inaction. There have been ripples of activities, such as raiding parties, isolated attacks, etc., in which our French and British allies have also taken part.

These actions have succeeded in securing many objectives which were: (a) To keep up the fighting spirit and morale of the troops; (b) to keep the initiative in offensive operations which gives us a moral superiority before the enemy; (c) to keep in constant touch with the enemy, as a means of ascertaining his intentions and movements by direct sight, or by information obtained from prisoners; (d) to take away from the enemy important positions so as to neutralize their effect against us now and at the time of a future offensive; (e) to make of such positions a base for ourselves in the event of an offensive on our side; for instance, Dosso Alto di Zure in the Adige valley, was conquered during the night of Aug. 2 by one of our attack companies, after a hand to hand fight, in which were also captured 180 prisoners, arms, ammunition in great quantities; (f) to keep the enemy busy on all the line so as to obtain the great result of preventing him from taking any troops away from our front to the German front in France. In order to show the absolute importance of these small actions, it is enough to note that between the 9th and 10th inst. we captured 700 men, two cannons and 20 machine guns.

Machine gun and artillery activities have been constant, and so has the aerial activity been quite remarkable. Not fewer than twenty enemy planes were brought down during the first ten days of August. The 5th, a most successful raid took place, during which the aviation fields on the Livenza, military and ammunition depots on the Adriatic coast, and the very port of Pola were bombed by our airplanes and airships. A superb raid on Vienna was successfully carried out by Anzani, who with a squad of planes, left the field, returning only a few hours after, having been forced up to a height of 8,000 meters by anti-aircraft fire, and then dropping over Vienna, not bombs to kill women and children, but one ton of leaflets inviting the population to open their eyes and see, and giving thereby an example of the superiority of our civilization that does not destroy and kill non-combatants, as is customary amongst our enemies.

On the Albanian front, after the successful advance of the First Army, which was carried out strictly with Italian troops, our lines have been still further advanced so as to occupy the lower Semeti; more to the west, our lines extend to the Sinia-Berat positions and connect with the most advanced French troops. The 5th instant, our troops that were marching up the Semeti threatened the right flank of the Austro-Hungarians that still occupied the left bank of the Semeti river, and finally obliged them wholly to retreat to the right bank.

On the French front, after the heroic action, and the valuable help of Bligny, Sainte-Euphrasie, at Moulin d'Arve, help that was of so much importance in maintaining the possession of Rheims and in the recent general success in the triangle of Rheims-Chatenau-Thierry-Soissons, after ten days of continuous battle, our tired and thin-out troops were relieved by allied units. It is unfortunate that the world is not sufficiently acquainted with the noble refusal of our men to fall back on the rear lines until all the actions undertaken should be entirely finished.

There is no important news from our troops on the Macedonian front, in the Holy Land, in Lybia and Ethiopia. On the average, the situation continues to be favorable to the allies, so favorable as it had not been for some time past. The glorious Italian success has for the moment overcome the Austrian offensive power; the success of the allied armies in France, supported by the fresh vigor and high morale of the American army, is steadily minimizing the successes obtained by the Germans last March. Forecasts, naturally, are not easy. Unless a sudden collapse of the morale of the German army, which does not seem possible, should come true, it is probable that a certain equilibrium will establish itself on the French front, more or less along the same lines as before.

KULTUR

(From the Deutsche Tageszeitung.)

The British and the entente powers generally are anxious to remind us of our sins against civilization. Let them first sweep the dirt away from their own front door, for garbage is heaping up to a mountainous height.

Here, Woodrow Wilson, with his idealistic principles, is, no doubt, happy in the company in which he finds himself, the company of murderers and thieves. Thank heaven he has at last exposed his criminal features to the world, and the world will ultimately bless Germany when she has smashed that countenance beyond all recognition.

GERMAN COMMAND ISSUES CONTRADICTORY ORDERS

Mix-Up Indication of General Break-Down in Morale and Ability.

With the American Army on the Alsace-Vosges Front, Sept. 1.—(10 a. m.)—The morale of the German army has become very low and the entry of Americans into the fighting line is creating a feeling in Germany that the German cause is hopeless.

This observation upon the situation in and behind the Teutonic ranks is officially made by the French government, following the preliminary examination of about 12,000 German prisoners.

The unsteadiness of the German command is plainly revealed by the numerous contradictory orders that have been issued since the mighty drive began in the west.

The effect of the confusion of orders has been very bad upon the officers and is reflected in the depression of the Hun troops.

A great majority of the captured orders and counter orders from the various commanders of the army corps and divisions.

However, some of the younger boche command is plain to see and boast of the ability of Von Hindenburg and Ludendorff.

A majority of the officers say that the diminution of German man power is compelling the use of recruits who are ill-equipped to the rigors of campaigning.

One section of the French report, dealing with the condition of the German prisoners, says: "The great mass of prisoners is characterized by a complete lack of uniformity. The appearance of youth and weakness among them is considerable. Most of them were suffering from extreme fatigue when taken, judging by their poor resistance and the class of 1919 is composed of youths who have physically deteriorated and thus it is impossible to get an estimate as to what the class of 1920 will amount to."

"To sum up, the German line, whose composition so long remained intact, and which has been so greatly weakened by losses, is now allowing hopes to appear despite attempts at careful concealment."

THE MELTING POT

(Leslie's.)

A detective lieutenant in New York, who died after twenty years of service, left an estate of more than $48,000.

On the average, the situation continues to be favorable to the allies, so favorable as it had not been for some time past. The glorious Italian success has for the moment overcome the Austrian offensive power; the success of the allied armies in France, supported by the fresh vigor and high morale of the American army, is steadily minimizing the successes obtained by the Germans last March.

Forecasts, naturally, are not easy. Unless a sudden collapse of the morale of the German army, which does not seem possible, should come true, it is probable that a certain equilibrium will establish itself on the French front, more or less along the same lines as before.

UNABLE TO CHECK BRITISH, HUNS HURRIEDLY DIG LINE BACK CAMBRAI

(By Joseph W. Griggs.)

On the British Front, Aug. 28.—(Copyright, N. Y. World.)—Attacking again today despite cold, soaking rains and squalls, the Canadians, Scottish and English troops, who in two days have made such a deep drive into the enemy's lines before and above Arras on an eight-mile front, reached the outskirts of Haucourt, Remy and Boiry-Notre Dame (the latter officially reported captured), thereby taking important ground beyond any previous British line in this sector during the whole war.

Today's attack followed the successes of yesterday evening, when Vis-en-Artois and Arras were captured and the outskirts of Oppy reached. As a consequence, not only a considerable section of the Hindenburg defense line has passed into British possession and the Guillemont-Ginchy line is seriously menaced, but it also has opened a salient and pushes back the boche from the rich coal fields he has always coveted. He is desperately fighting for time to perfect his defenses and would have been driven into an effective resistance.

The battle which began a week ago has assumed the proportions of a hard-fought campaign. It is a desperate attempt to check the victorious British and colonial troops who are advancing over a large part of the 45-mile battle front.

In the north the Canadian and Scottish troops advanced to the attack yesterday morning, and when I visited that area later they were still advancing along an eight-mile front and had driven approximately 12,000 yards (almost ten miles) into the German lines.

To the south the Fourth Army has developed a big attack despite the enemy's increased resistance.

May Be a New Waterloo. "This may be the beginning of another Waterloo," was the content of a remark heard today from a responsible officer. While the Germans reel under the pressure of the British attack, the advancing British troops have never been in their spirits or more eager to press back the enemy, whom they see now groggy under repeated blows. In three weeks' time the British have captured nearly 50,000 prisoners and destroyed the effectiveness of many divisions
